

Do banks take it?

By Staff writer
The Idaho Observer
February 13, 2003

No. But, banks do make a record of your every financial transaction available to government so that it can make sure you pay your fair share of the required fees, interest and taxes that accompany the privilege of using its ever increasingly worthless paper as a medium of exchange. People, however, do take it.